A Theatrical Puzzle. "There is something absolutely baf-fling to understand," said a theatrical manager, "about the perfect regularity of the sizes of audiences for any given play. You know I manage two theaters here in New York. One of them holds about 2,000 people and the other holds about 1,000 people.

"Now, when we have a play that is what we call a great success at the small theater-such a success that we have to turn people away every nightit is almost invariable that the number turned away is not far from 30 each night-that is to say, 1,000 people come and get in and 30 come and cannot get in. And when we have a similar success at the large theater the average number of people turned away is just the same-about 30-that is, 2,000 people come and get in and 30 come and cannot get in.

"Now, to all appearances the one play has made just as big a hit as the other, so why is it that just about 1,030 people want to see the one every night and just about 2,000 people want to see the other every night? Why do the 2.030 never come to the small theater? They never do. Such a thing was never heard of. It's a little section in the law of averages that I never could understand."-New York Tribune.
